NOT FOR WOMEN ONLY

An Inside Look at Female Bisexuality

Does she or doesn't she? Only her girl friend knows for sure. Most men dream about peeking through the keyhole of a locked bedroom door to watch what goes on between two women making love. If you're that type of red-blooded male and want to meet and get it on with bisexual women, then here's everything you've ever wanted to know....

by Louis Montesano

Research by Linda Francischelli

Ask a group of men about their sexual fantasies and one answer will invariably come up more often than any other. The scenario involves the man, as either a voyeur or an active participant, with two or more women. Take a look at almost any men's magazine. One girl getting off by herself is good, but two girls getting each other off—or two girls with one guy or even three girls—is better.

Lesbianism is one thing. Most heterosexual males don't enjoy watching two stereotypical, dykish men-haters in action. Bisexuality is another story entirely. Bisexual women are not only accepted by men but are, in most cases, the culmination of a man's wet dreams.

Unlike bisexuality in men, which most heterosexual males and even many straight and bi women still find somewhat hard to accept, bisexuality in women seems like an almost natural state of affairs. As one woman who had her first bisexual experience at age 17 put it, "After I first made love to a woman, I realized why men like making love to women. They're so soft, so round."

Indeed! But as any woman will tell you, there's more to it than just the physical. The female of the species has traditionally been considered more emotional, and whether you believe in such biological determinism or not, it is nonetheless true that society allows women more outlets to express their feelings toward not only men but their fellow woman as well. For example, women

In this issue—High Society's "Bisexual Girls Special"—we're presenting not one lesbian layout, but two! Erica and Annette, whose mothers are sisters, grew up only miles from one another in Colorado. Best friends since they were toddlers, they played house together, attended grammar and high schools together, and went skiing together on weekends and holidays. But it wasn't until Annette and Erica started rooming

Nadine

"Brown Sugar"

When the Rolling Stones wrote that song, they must've had someone like Nadine in mind. The cotton-candy slit between her chocolate pussylips is sweet and sticky as honey. Maybe that's because Nadine creams at the thought of someone—man or woman—nibbling on her pink clit and licking up her peach-nectar cum.

Raised on a farm in the Deep South, Nadine knew from an early age that bigger, better things were in store. Her vocal talents proved to be the key that unlocked her future. Nadine lives on the Coast now, is a back-up singer for a recording studio, and hopes to cut her own hit disc soon.

Meanwhile, she's learned that there's more to life in the city than she dreamed about down on the farm. Devirginized at age 19 by a recording-industry exec in the back of his limo, Nadine—who's now 23—has made up for lost time. Completely bisexual, Nadine is just as likely to take a woman to bed as a man—but surprisingly, she prefers her lovers to be Caucasian.

"It's not that I don't get off with black dudes and chicks," she says. "I do, a lot. But I love it when a white boy or girl makes love to me. I keep my eyes open and get off on the contrast of their skin against mine. White on black—it turns me on and makes me cum faster!"
